

Re: Publishing course material

From Office of Student Rights and Responsibilities <osrr@calpoly.edu>

Date Mon 8/31/2026 1:41 PM

To Rishub Patel <rpate133@calpoly.edu>

Hello Rishub.

As long as you have your instructor's permission to publish the material publicly, it is permitted. Please retain documentation of that permission in case questions arise in the future. If a student discovers and uses your repository to cheat, you will not be held responsible for a violation of the Student Code of Conduct related to that student's cheating.

Sincerely,

The Office of Student Rights & Responsibilities

Dean of Students Office | SEMSA | California Polytechnic State University | Building 81 (Hillcrest)

cc: Student File .calpoly-advocate@advocate.symplicity.com

Please submit an online report if someone is exhibiting inappropriate, unusual, and/or concerning behavior. If it is an emergency please dial 911.

From: Rishub Patel <rpate133@calpoly.edu>

Sent: Monday, August 31, 2026 01:19 PM

To: Office of Student Rights and Responsibilities <osrr@calpoly.edu>

Subject: Publishing course material

Hello,

I am making a GitHub repository to upload my work from my CPE233 class in order to put it on my resume to share it with recruiters. It will fully document all of my work from the course. I have obtained permission from the professor to publish it publicly, but am still unsure if it is within my student rights. I believe the semester-equivalent class has similar course content, so if someone finds my repository and uses it to cheat, would I get in trouble for it?

Thank you,

Rishub